PREFACE.

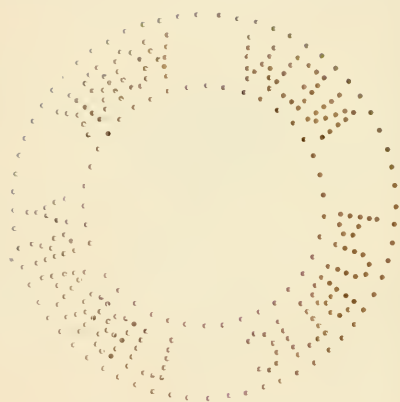

THE favor accorded the First Series of "Initials and Pseudonyms," both in this country, and abroad, has been very gratifying to the compiler.

It is hoped that this supplementary volume, which contains 6500 initials and pseudonyms, answering to 4800 real names, will be received with the same kind consideration

Such a subject, constantly changing and growing, is practically inexhaustible; but strenuous care has been exercised in making the work accurate and as complete as possible. For the kindly assistance given by interested readers, the compiler desires to express his thanks and his assurance that any corrections or supplementary information will be gratefully received.

Boston Rebel, The. John Lowell.

"Mr. Lowell's articles in Russell's 'Centinel,' over the signature of the 'The Boston Rebel,' in opposition to the war of the United States and Great Britain, were of a character the most inflammatory of any political writings of the day. His productions were in a highly nervous style, abounding in piquant philippics. His remarks on Madison's war, in a large pamphlet, exhibited the most exciting attack on the Democratic administration that emanated from any political writer. His fervid genius and rapid pen poured forth pamphlet after pamphlet, and column after column in the newspaper, replete with spirit and force and purpose, on the side of the Federal party, in warm opposition to the general government."

"English reporters are not far behind their American brethren in coining political nicknames. The 'Pall Mall Gazette' gives some specimens: 'The late Mr. George Bentinck was always spoken of as "The Bo'suu," from his affection for the sea and all that floats thereon; Lord Henry Lennox's posturings made his sobriquet, "Miss Lennox," particularly appropriate; Lord Beauchamp, when he sat in the Lower House as the Hon. F. Lygon, was "Miss Fanny"; Lord Elcho, now Earl of Wemyss, was invested with the title "Cool of the Evening," so smilingly complacent was he in his corner seat below the gangway; "Batavian Grace" fitted Mr. Beresford-Hope "like a glove"; the son of an eminent — a very eminent — statesman was known in the gallery as "The Cub."'"

Laco. Stephen Higginson.

"Among the most tenacious political opponents of John Hancock, was Stephen Higginson, a nervous writer of great spirit, whose articles signed 'Laco,' in Russell's 'Centinel,' effected a strong feeling. Mr. Higginson was a merchant on Long wharf, and passed down State Street to his store. The truckmen who stood in State Street used great efforts to teach a parrot, that hung in a cage at the corner of Merchants' Row, to recognize 'Laco,' and to curse him; and so completely successful were they, that pretty Poll no sooner saw Mr. Higginson approach, than she began to 'Hurrah for Hancock! Down with Laco!' and continued to do so till he was out of sight."

"As I think of the insult that's done to this nation,
Red tears of riving from my faytures I wash,
And uphold in this pome to the world's daytistation,
The sleeves that appointed Professor M'Cosh.

"O false Sir John Kane! is it thus that you praych me?

"In a few days after the Doctor's [Dr. Richard Farmer] death, the following jeu d'esprit (not improbably by his friend, Mr. George Stevens) appeared in one of the daily papers: 'This eminent critic . . . composed some of his pleasantest works in an arbour on the verge of a pond where he resided . . . and he amused himself with a variety of water-fowls, which covered his pond, and which, with others not of an aquatic nature, were much admired by all those who visited his hospitable mansion. These birds, a Cambridge friend informs me, he disposed of in the following manner:—

"My geese I give and bequeath to the Heads of the University.

My ducks and drakes—to Sir Henry Vane Tempest.

My peacock—to the Duchess of Gordon.

My guinea-fowls—to Colonel Cawthorne.

My pigeons—to Lady Buckinghamshire, etc.

Haywood, P. D. One of the Crew. An American sailor of the "Alabama."

"P. D. Haywood, given as the name of one of the crew who wrote the article in a recent number of the 'Century,' describing 'Life in Alabama,' proves on investigation to be a literary forger, not unworthy to rank with Maepherson or Ireland himself. This Haywood is a fraud of long experience. He has borne several names, and disgraced each of them. As J. H. Horton he robbed four banks, and Pinkerton now has a reward of $1000 offered for him. Bigamy is among his lighter misdemeanors. He is now under arrest at Lancaster, Pa., for forgeries aggregating $50,000. He admits that he was never on the rebel cruiser, and that he invented the whole of the 'Alabama' story. That he could deceive the 'Century' editors and Houghton, Mifflin & Co., who published his article in book form, proves him an adept in literary forgery, scarcely unequalled by any of his famous predecessors."
